A New Edition

OF THAT MOST VALUABLE WORK,

THE DIVINE RULE OF FAITH AND PRACTICE.

BY THE

REV. WILLIAM GOODE, M.A., F.S.A.,

Rector of All-Hallows the Great and Less, London.

REVISED AND ENLARGED BY THE AUTHOR.

AT the present time especially, and under the present circumstances of the Church of England, it is impossible to overrate the importance of such a Work, establishing as it does, in the most satisfactory manner, and with proofs derived from extensive researches into the works of both ancient and modern authors, the proof of the doctrine which uproots the foundation of both Romanism and Tractarianism; the supremacy, perfection, and sufficiency of Holy Scripture; and discussing, in connection with its various other important points, such as the doctrine of the Sacraments, the Apostolical Succession, &c., &c.

CONTENTS.

- CHAP. I. Introductory remarks, pointing out the importance of ascertaining what Divine revelations we possess as constituting our rule of faith, and showing the objects and scope of the Work.
- II. Extracts from the "Tracts for the Times," and other works of their authors, showing what their doctrine respecting the Rule of Faith is, together with some general observations on their statements.
- III. Comparison of that doctrine with that of the Romish Church.
- IV. No writings extant entitled to the name of Apostolical Traditions but the canonical Scriptures.
- V. Patristical tradition is not a "practically infallible" witness of the oral teaching of the Apostles, nor receivable as a Divine informant. This chapter, which is divided into ten sections, and extends to more than 300 pages, reviews at length the writings of the Fathers of the first four or five centuries and shows at large their inadequacy—from their paucity, the discordance of their testimony, the uncertainties and difficulties with which their testimony is embarrassed, the rival appeals made to Patristical tradition, even in ancient times, &c., &c.—to serve as a certain informant of Divine truth.
- VI. The grounds on which the doctrine rests, that Scripture is the Word of God, in reply to the notion that it rests on Patristical tradition.
- VII. Holy Scripture is our sole divinely-revealed rule of faith and practice, and sole infallible judge of controversies in religion.
- VIII. Sufficiency and fulness of the Divine revelation conveyed to us in the Holy Scriptures, in reply to the charge of imperfection alleged against them; giving, first, a brief proof that all the fundamental articles of the faith are fully set forth in Scripture; and secondly, examining the rites and doctrines said by the Tractarians to be founded wholly or partly on tradition, and showing that there are no doctrines received by us as certain truths—i.e., as revelations from God, and consequently articles of faith, of which or any part of which our belief rests upon the testimony of tradition, and that we receive no rites as of Divine institution but such as are delivered to us in the Scriptures. In this part of the Work are considered, among various other points, the questions relating to baptism, the eucharist, the threefold order of the ministry, episcopacy, the apostolical succession, &c., &c.
- IX. Sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures to teach mankind the Christian religion, in reply to the charge of obscurity alleged against them.
- X. The Doctrine of the Fathers of the first six centuries on the subject of the work, extending to more than 300 pages; in which their testimonies are cited at large, (1) in opposition to the notion that Catholic consent is a Divine informant supplementary to and interpretative of Scripture, (2) maintaining that Scripture is the sole and complete rule of faith and judge of controversies, (3) that Scripture is the sole Divine Rule of practice, (4) that Scripture is sufficiently clear to teach the faith, and (5) that Patristical tradition is not the ground upon which our belief in the inspiration of Scripture must be founded.
- XI. The Doctrine of the Church of England and her principal divines on the subject.

Messrs. WILLIAM CURRY AND COMPANY have to announce, that the time for receiving subscriptions at the rate of 21s., to the above valuable work, has been extended to the 28th February, after which period the price will be considerably raised. They, therefore, invite Clergymen and others interested in the controversy to forward their names, without delay, to secure the advantage thus presented. The whole work, it is expected, will be completed in March, 1853.
